Digital & Print Rights Law The Digital & Print Rights Law sets out the rights which should be afforded to consumers when purchasing items digitally and printing them. They include, amongst other things, the right to: access the content on the item view the item before buying it view the item after buying it alter the item reproduce the item transfer the item to another device The law also affords the purchaser of an item the right not to purchase the item if they so wish. S.1: An act of sale The law states that the simple sale of an item comes within the meaning of "an act of sale" and that a purchaser of a digital item is considered to be the purchaser of the entire item, including its separate parts. This acts as a landmark decision for the introduction of the right to access from 2006. The case of Waddington v Taylor was decided in the High

Community-acquired pneumonia in the human immunodeficiency virus-infected patients with multiple drug resistance to pneumonia therapeutic drugs. Infection with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) is associated with a higher incidence of community-acquired pneumonia (CAP). The aim of the study was to determine the etiology, diagnostic, and therapeutic options of CAP in HIV-positive patients at a tertiary hospital, and to analyze the clinical-laboratory characteristics of the patients and the results of treatment. A descriptive, cross-sectional study of adult patients with CAP, who were diagnosed between January 2005 and December 2010, was carried out. Diagnosis of CAP was established based on the criteria of the Spanish consensus statement on the diagnosis and treatment of CAP. Patients had an HIV diagnosis and were receiving a combination of antiretroviral medications. Fifty
