All Rights Reserved.The other day, my friend Cassie asked me what I thought about college admissions. Cassie has been thinking about applying to multiple schools (as most of us are), and she was wondering what I thought about her thoughts on school choice. "College is like a buffet," she said. She said she had decided she liked seafood and wanted to go to school that offered a bunch of seafoody type of courses. But then she realized that she could also go to a school that offered a bunch of hearty meat and potatoes type courses. "So how do you decide which school to go to?" she asked. I pulled up an article from a local paper from a few years ago. The school of choice article was a very old article that probably looked a lot different a few years ago, but I wanted to use it as an example because the choices for everyone to make are very different. You have 1) Your one school, 2) Your two school, 3) Your out of state school, and 4) Your in state school. You don't have to decide right now what school you're going to choose. You could change your mind later. Or you could decide that you're going to go to

Allergic asthma: an immunological, functional and histopathological study. An attempt has been made to study the clinical status, histopathology and immunopathology of allergic asthma in 100 patients using suitable grading of clinical symptoms and signs, histopathology and immunopathology, particularly of airways to date little investigated. There is a definite association between clinical status and the degree of inflammation, but many asthmatics with prominent eosinophil mucosal infiltration failed to demonstrate clinical asthma. There was little, if any, correlation between clinical status and atopy as measured by skin and bronchial provocative tests. Inflammation of the airways and bronchospasm are major determinants in asthma, but where epithelial or stromal cell damage predominated, asthma did not occur. A wide spectrum of pathogenesis lies between no abnormality and severe lesions, with the forms in between being more common. a criminal offense if it is not the result of the free will of the victim. The statutory provision on which the defendant relies reads as follows: Section 19-1-107. Lack of voluntary consent.

Rape is the unlawful sexual intercourse with a female of the age of sixteen years or over, where there is a lack of the victim's consent to the intercourse because the victim is incapable of giving consent by reason of being mentally defective or mentally incapacitated or because he is physically helpless. Lack of the victim's consent may be proved by evidence of threats of bodily injury to the victim or confinement or of imprisonment to extort or force compliance. We find no error in the trial court's refusal to give the defendant's requested instruction on the lack of consent element. Here, the State introduced uncontroverted evidence that a blow to the head during a previous fight had temporarily rendered the victim temporarily incapacitated. The defendant's sexual penetration of the victim shortly after the victim's head injury occurred without a doubt establishes his lack of consent to sexual intercourse. The defendant has produced no evidence to support his theory of temporary incapacity. The fact that the defendant was given and accepted a blood alcohol test shortly after the incident does not negate his ability to resist or control his actions. C. MERGER At the close of the State's case, and again at the close of the evidence, the defendant moved for merger of Count I, first degree sexual assault, into Count II, *921 attempted first degree sexual assault. He also moved to dismiss Count II on the same grounds. The trial
