Can someone help me? A: You're using non-breaking spaces which are not a valid text formatting method on TeX. Try choosing the character — possibly by copying and pasting that into your document. Here's a sample run of your document with and without use of a non-breaking space. The sample is much longer than your document so you can see how the escaping the non-breaking spaces affects the formatting. I initially typed out a sample TeX file for you to make sure you were actually writing the document correctly, and that you were just copying a sample line from that TeX file. You can find that sample TeX file here. Of course, you could just copy and paste the content of this answer into your.tex file and fix the problem yourself. But if you're having questions about TeX, I'd recommend learning to write TeX files from scratch so that you learn the proper format for writing TeX code. I know that as soon as I learned how to write TeX, I was basically able to write and understand any TeX document as well as a professional TeX guru. If you haven't already done so, you should also check out the TeX StackExchange forum. They have a lot of knowledgeable people there who are happy to answer questions about TeX issues, including questions about how to correctly format text. A: Running pdflatex -shell-escape in the terminal after you run pdflatex should give you a message about how to disable onbreakp. You can find more on tex.stackexchange here, for instance by running texdoc tex-en. U.S. Pat. No. 6,007,965, to Wierschem et al. issued Dec. 28, 1999, describes a system and method for making amorphous alloys. At column 2, line 59, Wierschem et al. teach that "[a]n nodules of formed amorphous alloy material are commercially available, and such nodules can be placed, bonded or otherwise affixed on a support surface, such as silicon wafer." U.S. Pat. No. 6,245,328, to Wierschem et al. issued Jun. 12, 2001, discloses a system and method for fabricating a microelectronic device that has at least one microelectronic element formed from a

This proposal is for the continuation of the Northwest Kidney Study, a prospective cohort study of 5,000 kidney donors and their 500 recipients. In year 1 of the award, we recruited the first 500 transplants and enrolled another 500 donors and their 500 recipients. Recipients have completed 1 year follow-up with 93% retention. Donors have completed recruitment of 80% of their desired sample, but have not yet completed 1 year follow-up, with an 80% retention rate. Funding is requested for Year 2 of follow-up of the donors and for follow-up of 100 recipient pairs who were denied transplantation but who have not yet been enrolled as tolled participants. At this point, we plan to show that persons who undergo kidney donation are not at increased risk of having kidney disease (prevalent at the time of donation), and that those who are offered donation are not at increased risk of complications of donation. The present study also will provide data on predictors of long-term transplant outcomes. In a data collection and follow-up phone call, we will follow-up all transplants through 2 years, and our data collection will continue for an additional 3-4 years. We will examine the predictors of negative psychosocial effects of donation, to establish the factors that may be amenable to intervention. Data analysis will compare those whose self-reported health has not been affected by donation with those whose self-reported health has been affected. Analyses will also include donors who have not yet been matched to recipients. Finally, we will estimate risks of long-term graft and patient loss in the 5,000 participants. Successful completion of the proposed study will provide much of the information needed to make evidence-based recommendations about the appropriateness of kidney donation for patients and their families.
