Blacksmith features three levels of play, each a completely separate and standalone game, but combined together for a seamless experience. 1-3 This article is intended to provide background information for the first three-part episode of Arctic Adventure, a series of animated entries in the 2003 Guinness World Records. Episode 3 will not be released until September 13, 2003. Episode 1 can be viewed for free and Episode 2 for free with the purchase of a subscription from the site. Background According to the 2003 Guinness World Records, part of the Guinness World Records series, 1,157 volunteers, including 349 children, registered for the 2003 Arctic Adventure expedition. The record attempt was organized by the British-based Arctic Discovery Expedition Society (ADEES), an organization dedicated to promoting human survival skills and Arctic exploration through expeditions. The Guinness World Records team noted that the average longevity of the first season only lasted 9 days. Overall, the Guinness World Records team kept a team in the Tromsø Airport tracking the progress of the challenge. Participants Iceland On 2 September 2003, at 11:48 (UTC), a team consisting of 317 people, including 219 children and 88 teenagers aged 11-16, registered at the Laugavegur terminal for departure to the North Pole. Sponsors of the project included Bamiyan Tours, Svane Publishing, Danmiller Skating School, SigmaHF Shoe Repair, HJ Rolfsens to Gaard, Altar.is, Völlur Travel Agency and Boðafélag Reykjavíkur. Icelandic newspapers contributed prominently to the project: daily Morgunblaðið recruited over 80 people, while major newspapers TT, Fréttablaðið and Íslandsposten covered the project intensely. There were also news reports at local news portals Fötburinn and Stundin. The icebreaker “Snæfells” and its crew needed to be co-ordinated with London if a result could be achieved. The shortest route between the UK and Iceland would have been straight down the D97 through the North Sea, Iceland and Greenland. The only way across the water in that direction would have been a ferry through the Hebrides. However, in May 2002, the government put a stop to the plan because they thought that members of the crew would be liable for diving in the war-torn Libyan and Yemeni waters, although they were ill-equipped to rescue British sailors under that circumstance.
