the city of depok, with a total area of 692.5 square kilometers, has a population density of 66,000 persons per square kilometer. depok city is the largest city in the metropolitan region of jakarta. depok city is the seat of the gawang tengah, the high level administrative center for depok regency. depok city is located in the gempol central business district in depok. depok city has the highest population density among all the five municipalities in dki jakarta. the area of depok city is 4,568 square kilometers. the area of the city of depok is only 2.6 times the area of the city of bogor. the first suburbanization in jakarta occurred in the areas outside of jakarta city.

in the 1960s, the dki jakarta built a highway, a toll road, and a railway station in the city of west jakarta which led to an increase in the urban population and industrialization in that area. in the late 1980s and early 1990s, the government constructed the south jakarta-bandung toll road, the jatinegara toll road, and the jakarta-cikampek toll road. this resulted in an increase in the central city of jakarta. the rapid urbanization of jakarta in the 1990s was a result of the government's policy of urbanization in the suburbs. the government constructed new towns and freeways that provided a framework for development (leaf 1994). the capital city of jakarta is still growing, and its growth is mostly in the peripheries of jakarta. jabodetabek or dki jakarta is the fastest growing and densest metropolitan region of indonesia. the growth of the metropolitan region of jakarta is considered to be a consequence of urbanization and population growth, especially rural-to-urban migration. the growth of the metropolitan region of jakarta is mostly due to a large population of industrial and agricultural workers who are migrating from outside jakarta to jakarta.
